FOREWORD

AWADH, or Oudh, as it is commonly spelt, is one of the two provinces which now form the United Provinces. Its old history is mostly conjectural. The name is probably derived from Ayodhia, a city which still exists, and which was once the capital of the great Rama whose exploits are sung in the celebrated epic, the Rama-yana. His younger brother Lakshman is popularly believed to have founded a city Lakshmanpur, which grew into Lucknow, the present capital of Oudh.

Little further is known about Lucknow until we come to Musulman times. In the reign of Akbar it was a district (sarkar) in the province (suba) of Awadh. It was apparently a place important enough for the establishment of a mint, and coins were struck here by Babar, Sher Shah, Akbar, Shahjahan, Aurangzeb, Shah Alam I, Jahandar, Farrukhsiyar, Rafi-ud-darjat, Shahjahan II and Muhammad Shah (N.S.XXV, p. 242). On the weakening of the Mughal Empire, the governors of the province became independent kings.

The story of these kings of Oudh is one of the most romantic in the annals of Indian History and one thoroughly typical. The dynasty was founded by a Persian adventurer, a merchant from Naishapur, who rose to favour in the Mughal Court and was made the Minister of the realm (Wazir-ul-Mumalik) and Governor of Oudh (A. D. 1720). He and his descendants were known as the Nawab-Wazirs.

Oudh came in time to be a very big and important principality. It comprised not only Oudh proper, but also Rohilkhand, Gorakhpur, Ghazipur, Benares, Allahabad and Kora, i.e., the best part of the United Provinces. The Nawabs first chose the ancient Ayodhia as the seat of their Government founding a new city—Fyzabad—in its neighbourhood, but soon transferred themselves to Lucknow and re-established a mint there. The splendour of their court is mentioned by all contemporary writers. In the time of Asafu-d-daula, it was acknowledged to be at once the most magnificent and the most cultured court in the whole of India. In 1754 the third Nawab—Shujau-d-daula—was allowed to issue coins from the Imperial mint at Benares, and to appropriate the profits. The issues of that mint being, classed as Mughal, have been already described in this Museum's Catalogue of the coins of the Mughal Emperors published in 1920, and are therefore not included in the present catalogue.

In 1775, the Nawab Asafu-d-daula ceded the districts of Ghazipur and Benares, and with it the mint, to the English. The last Nawabi rupee issued from Benares was in 1775-1189 A.H., r. y. 16. (The English continued to issue rupees of that type from that mint up to 1819 when they closed the mint. On all these English issues the regnal year is fixed as 17.)

Asafu-d-daula established a new mint at Lucknow, but such was the credit of the Mughal Empire even then, that his Lucknow coins bore not only the Emperor's name but also the mint name of Benares. On these coins the regnal year changed with the Hijri until A. H. 1201, when it was fixed as 26. His successors up to Sa'adat Ali Khan kept to this type. All these issues have been included in the Mughal Catalogue and are not shown here. Sa'a-dat Ali Khan ceded the provinces of Rohilkhand, Allahabad, Kora and Gorakhpur to the English, and was thus left only with Oudh proper.

In A.D. 1814 (A.H. 1229) Ghaziu-d-din Haidar became the Nawab. In 1819 the Marquis of Hastings visited Lucknow and persuaded him to throw off his allegiance to the Mughal Empire and to assume the title King of Awadh and to coin money in his own name. He did this, but apparently after some hesitation. Towards the end of that year he was crowned as King in the Lal Baradari, which contained the throne room and where all his successors were formally crowned. (It is interesting to note that it is this palace which the Provincial Museum now occupies.) The coins reflect the changes in the political outlook.

The first change in 1234 was the substitution of the mint name Muhammadabad-Benares by Suba Awadh daru-l-amarat (Lucknow, the seat of Governorship of the province of Oudh) but the name of Shah Alam II and his R. Y. 26 were preserved (Type A). Later, in the same year, the name of the Emperor and his year were omitted: Ghaziu-d-din is described as king, and counts his dates from his accession to the Nawabi in A.H. 1229 and therefore the regnal year is shown as 5. No change is made in the mint name (Type B). In 1235 the Regnal year is given as 1, i.e. dating from his assumption of kingship (Type C). In 1236, the epithet Daru-l-amarat is changed to Daru-s-saltanat (the seat of the kingdom), (Type D). In 1253, Muhammad Ali Shah changed it further to Baitu-s-saltanat (the gate of the kingdom).

In 1256, he changed the words Suba Awadh (the province of Awadh) to Mulk Awadh (the country of Awadh). The only other change was made in A.H. 1267, by the last king, Wajid Ali Shah, who added the name Akhtarnagar, so that the mint read as Baitu-s-saltanat Lakhnau, Mulk Awadh Akhtarnagar.

As already stated, coins bearing the name Shah Alam and the mint Benares have not been described in this catalogue. There is another series bearing Shah Alam's name, the year 1229, R. Y. 26 and the mint Suba Awadh. Brown suggests in his introduction to the Indian Museum Catalogue, Volume IV, that they were not issued in 1229 at all, but probably in the year 1857 by the mutineers. These issues were also included in the Mughal Catalogue of our Museum and are not described here. The present catalogue deals only with the issues of Ghaziu-d-din Haidar from A. H. 1234 and contains all the four types A, B, C, D, mentioned above.

The next king Nasiru-d-din Haidar (1827-37) struck three types of coins, which are all contained in this collection; (a) those struck in the name of Sulaiman Jah, (b) those struck in the name of Nasiru-d-din Haidar, (c) those in the name of Nasiru-d-din Haidar with a change in the coat of arms and with the inscription running round it.

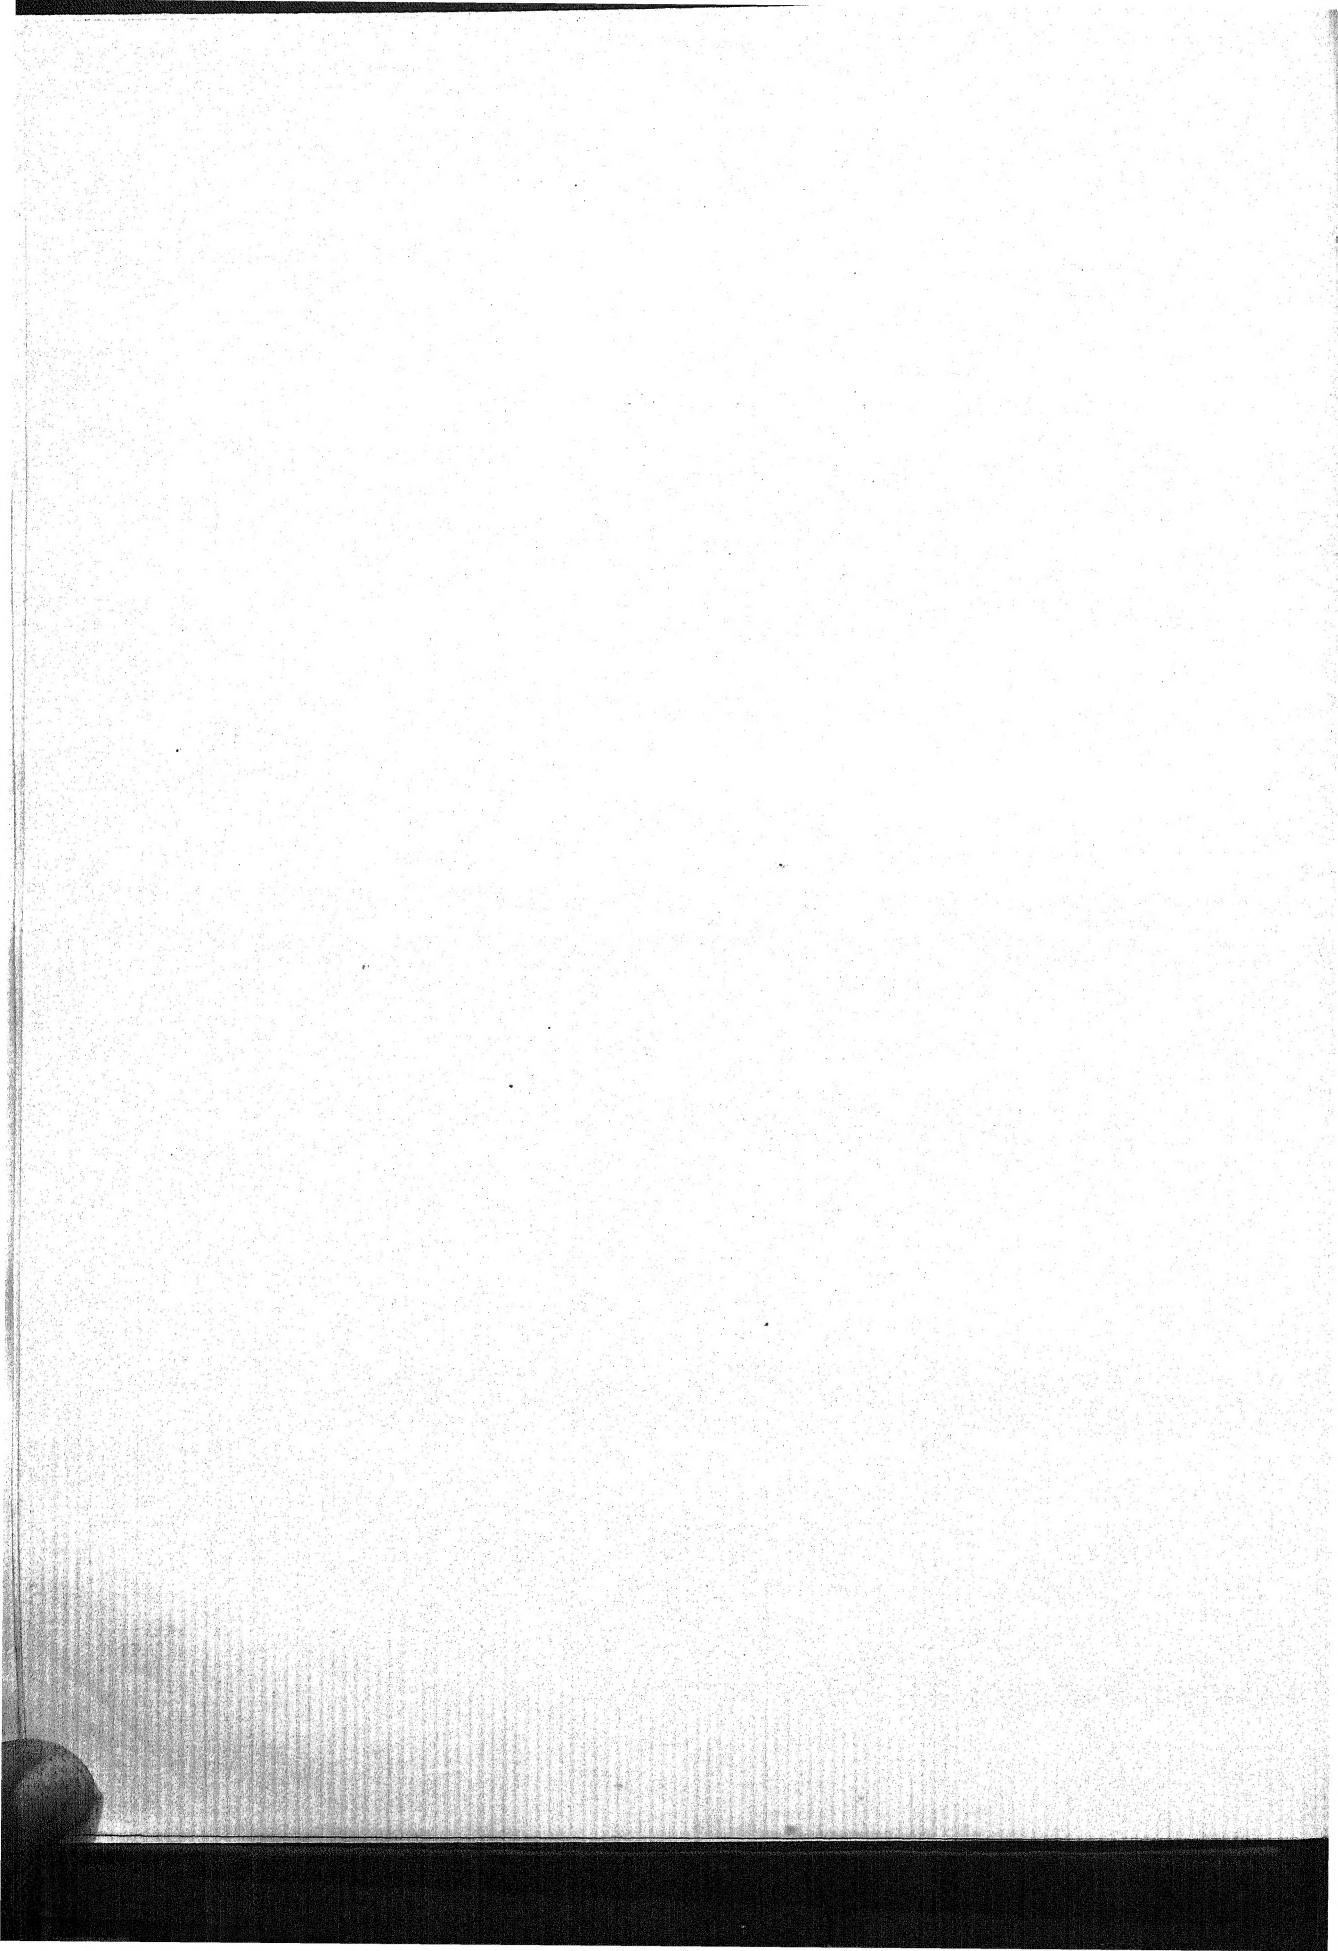

The two types of Muhammad Ali Shah (1837-42), Suba Awadh and Mulk Awadh are also well represented. The collection is rich in the issues of Amjad Ali Shah (1842-47), which so far were known to consist of one type only, but of which our collection possesses a large number of varieties. The collection of Wajid Ali Shah's (1847-56) coins is probably unequalled. With his deposition in 1856, Oudh became British territory and the dynasty of the Kings of Oudh came to an end.

Rai Bahadur Prayag Dayal has been connected with the Provincial Museum all his life and thoroughly knows the coins which he describes. He has taken great pains over his work. His descriptions are as concise as is consistent with clearness. The Catalogue follows the method of the previous ones—in each fresh class the first coin is described fully, and against the other coins only the points of difference are noted. A new feature, however, is the column giving the register number of each coin, which enables one to trace at once the provenance and other particulars of each coin. The table of mint marks printed at page 59 of the Indian Museum Catalogue, Volume IV, has been reproduced here for facility of reference, and has been brought up to date.

The collection here described is of importance in as much as it contains the largest number of coins of the kings of Awadh known to exist anywhere, and includes several mint marks hitherto unknown or unnoticed. It does not however contain all the known varieties, nor any specimens of exceptional rarity. It is hoped that the publication of this catalogue will, by drawing attention to the deficiencies, result in filling up the gaps.
